

Brad Zumwalt has been growing technology companies for over 30 years.

In 1989, Brad joined Image Club Graphics and led the company through sustained revenue growth. Image Club was twice recognized as one of Profit Magazine's 100 Fastest Growing Companies in Canada. In 1994, Brad negotiated the acquisition of Image Club by Aldus Corporation, which in turn was acquired by Adobe Systems.

Over the next four years, Brad led Adobe's worldwide visual content team of 200+ employees through sustained revenue growth exceeding $40 million dollars.

In 1998, Brad founded EyeWire.com, a visual content and design company. Following dramatic revenue growth, EyeWire was acquired by Getty Images. That same year, the Alberta Science and Technology Foundation recognized EyeWire's e-commerce success with an ASTech award for Outstanding Commercial Achievement. In 1999, Brad was nationally recognized as one of Canada's Top 40 Under 40 honourees.

In 2000, Brad and his wife Tanya founded Social Venture Partners Calgary, a unique non-profit funding partnership that combines a venture capital approach with local philanthropy. In 2001, Brad and Tanya were among those awarded Calgary's fifth annual Generosity of Spirit Award for services to Calgary's community.

In 2001, Brad founded Veer Incorporated, where he was Chairman and President. Veer sourced and delivered stock photography, illustration, and typefaces, while aiming to inspire the creative industries it served. In 2007, Veer was successfully acquired by Corbis, a company privately held by Bill Gates.

Today, Brad is leading initiatives to support other entrepreneurs and innovators. He co-founded Rainforest Alberta, a collective working to improve Alberta's innovation ecosystem, and collaborated with the city to build Platform, an innovation centre in Calgary's East Village neighbourhood that will provide resources and expertise to anyone with an idea.

Brad is a former member of the boards of Alberta University of the Arts, Science Alberta Foundation, University Technologies International, Norlien Foundation, Viewpoint Foundation, Social Venture Partners Calgary, and a past president of Social Venture Partners International.

Brad and Tanya have four children: Josh, Katie, Ben, and Cassie. The family divides their time between Calgary, AB and Fernie, BC.
